“Refugee Shelter Design Challenge”

Premise

During the 2010s, the European migrant crisis, also known as the European refugee crisis, saw a substantial rise in the influx of refugees and migrants into Europe. The word is frequently used to allude to the year 2015 when 1.3 million individuals applied for asylum in Europe - the greatest amount since World War II. Syrians (4%), Afghans (21%), and Iraqis were the most prevalent nationalities among those seeking refuge in Europe in 2015. (9%).

Due to a convergence of hostilities in the Middle East, notably in Syria, Afghanistan, and Iraq, Europe began to see an upsurge in refugee admissions in 2010.

Issue

The uprooting, entry, and adjustment caused by migration - brings with it a slew of social, political, social, and mental challenges, as well as a slew of misfortunes, starting with dialect and advancing through social, behavioural, devout, and natural shifts to a struggle with one's individual identity.

We need to identify the challenges as soon as possible and find answers as fast as possible!

Objective

Refugees and other affected people have the right to appropriate housing, which includes protection from the weather, a place to reside and keep their possessions, as well as privacy, comfort, and emotional security.

The challenge is to design or modulate a 'refugee shelter system' which can either adapt to the provided site or can be adapted anywhere else in the world - with no compromise in the quality of lifestyle.

Site Size

The Rukban camp is located in an isolated and inhospitable border area known as “the berm” where 70,000 Syrians who fled the war arrived in 2016 to enter Jordan. As of now, 10,000 people live under harsh conditions in the area, facing insufficient access to food, clean water, medical care and sanitation.

Rukban is a dry, isolated region near the Syrian border in Jordan's far northeast, close to the country's shared borders with Syria and Iraq. In 2014, the region was designated as a Syrian refugee camp. It's a no-man's land along the demilitarized zone between Jordan and Syria.

The design may be a single modular unit or it could be spread throughout the entire provided site of 360,000 square metres (0.36 square kilometres), which is having a perimeter of 2420 metres.

Coordinates: 33.3141789, 38.7014288

Note: Participants are free to pick a different location. Keep in mind that when selecting a site at a different location, the site must be justified within at least one of the two A1 sheets.

Submission Requirements
